

What is the FSS Program?

HUD's Family Self Sufficiency (FSS) program helps eligible individuals acquire the skills and experience they need to obtain work that pays a living wage, then offers them a unique savings opportunity as their earnings increase called an escrow account. Public housing agencies (PHAs) work with welfare agencies, schools, businesses, and other local partners to help FSS participants access services including but not limited to:

- ◆ child care
- ◆ transportation
- ◆ education and training
- ◆ home-ownership counseling.

In the FSS program you can....

- ◆ Save to purchase a house
- ◆ Find a better paying job
- ◆ Save for your children's college education.
- ◆ Repair credit

What is the FSS escrow?

Each participating family has the opportunity to develop FSS escrowed savings through an account established and controlled by the PHA. As a participant's earned income increases, so does the percentage they must pay for rent. For FSS participants, however, an amount generally equal to their increased rent because of increased earnings is placed in the FSS escrow account. The more money an individual earns, the more money HUD deposits into the escrow account. The escrow is not counted as an individual asset until the contract is completed and only when the money is paid directly to the individual.
